

A Fair SHOT

I am a young man named Dylan, and recently, I've come to a realization about how lucky my life is.

Does hard work really change lives?

'Cos I've always questioned
my privilege.

I studied in a private
high school...

I studied in a private
high school...

...which opened the door
to Ateneo University...

...which led me to the United States...

...and eventually, a scholarship to pursue
my master's degree in Australia.

Did I work hard?
Absolutely.

But I've also met too many brilliant students to believe hard work is the whole story.

The Golden Path

Because some students...

The Resource Gap

...start the race much farther behind.

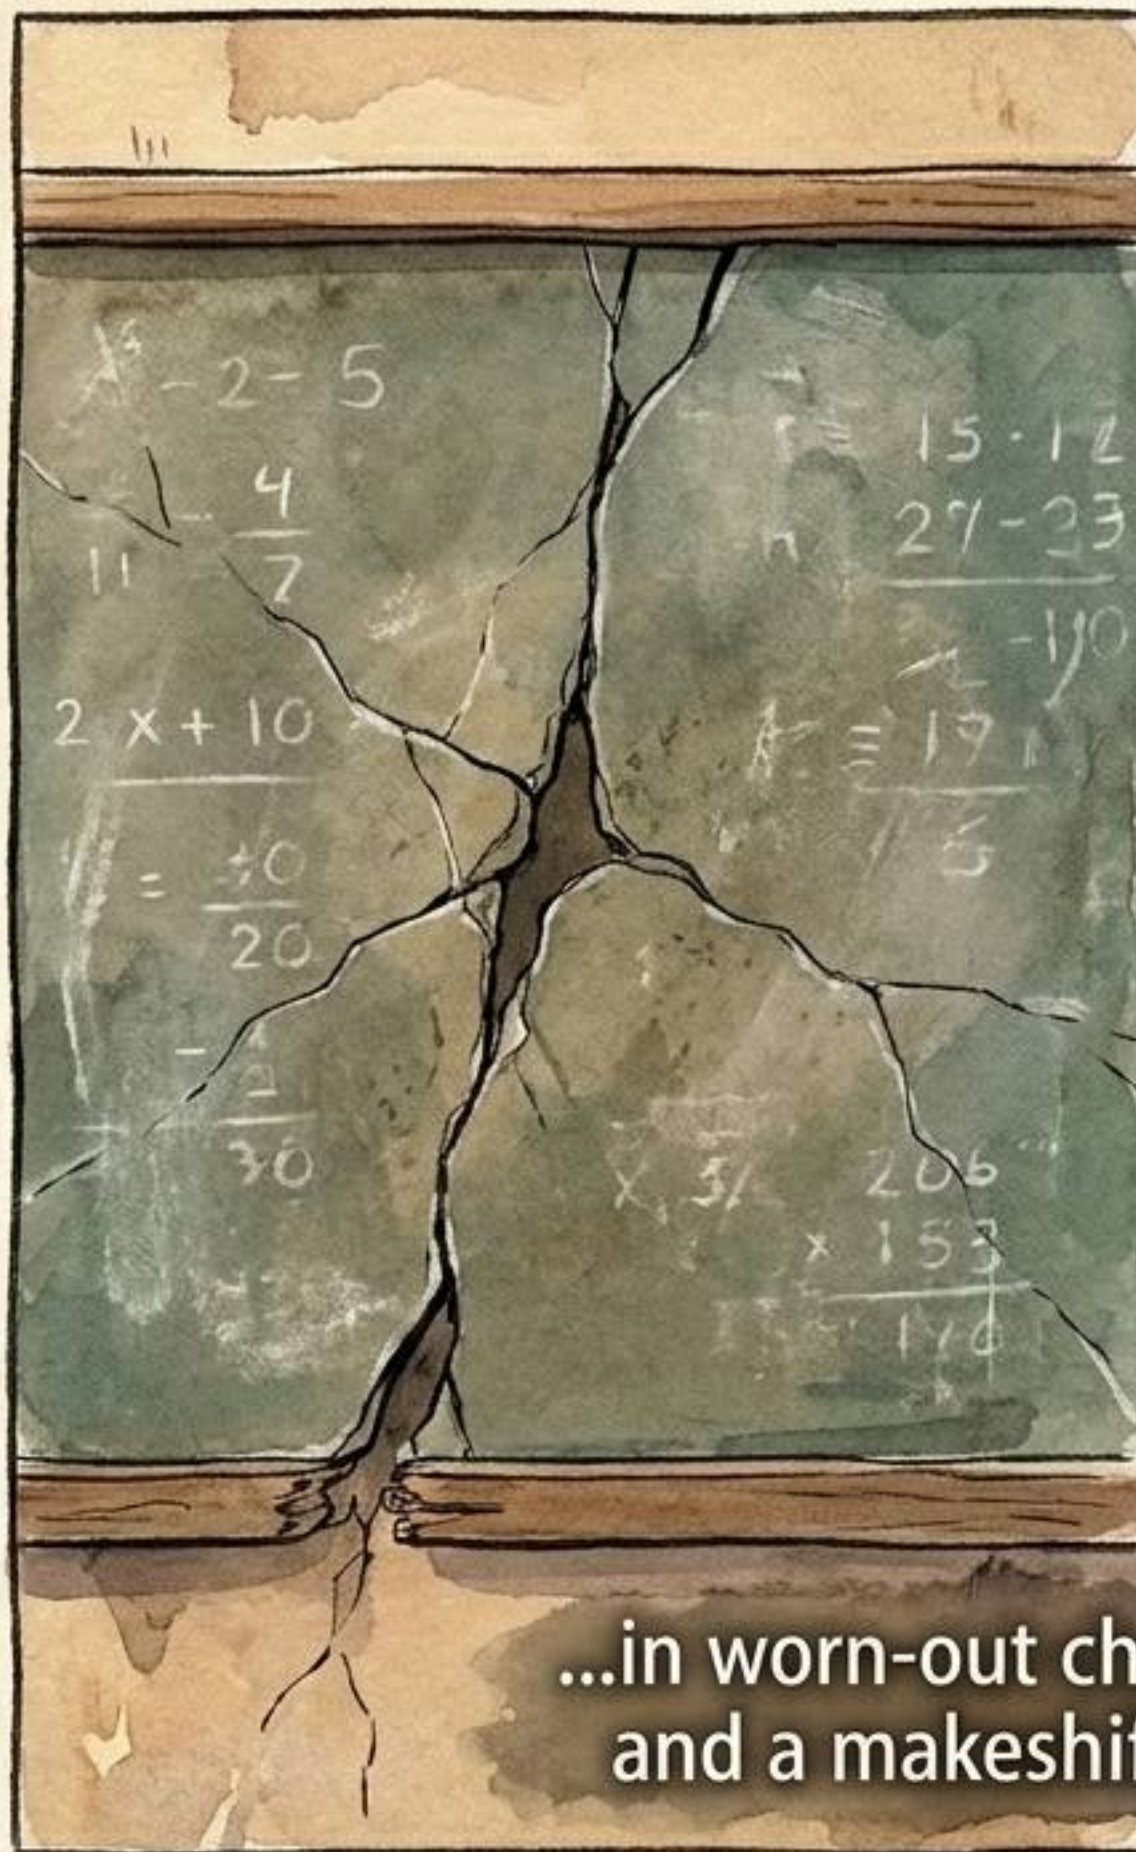

Walking kilometers to school... Crossing rivers... Climbing mountains and dangerous terrain.

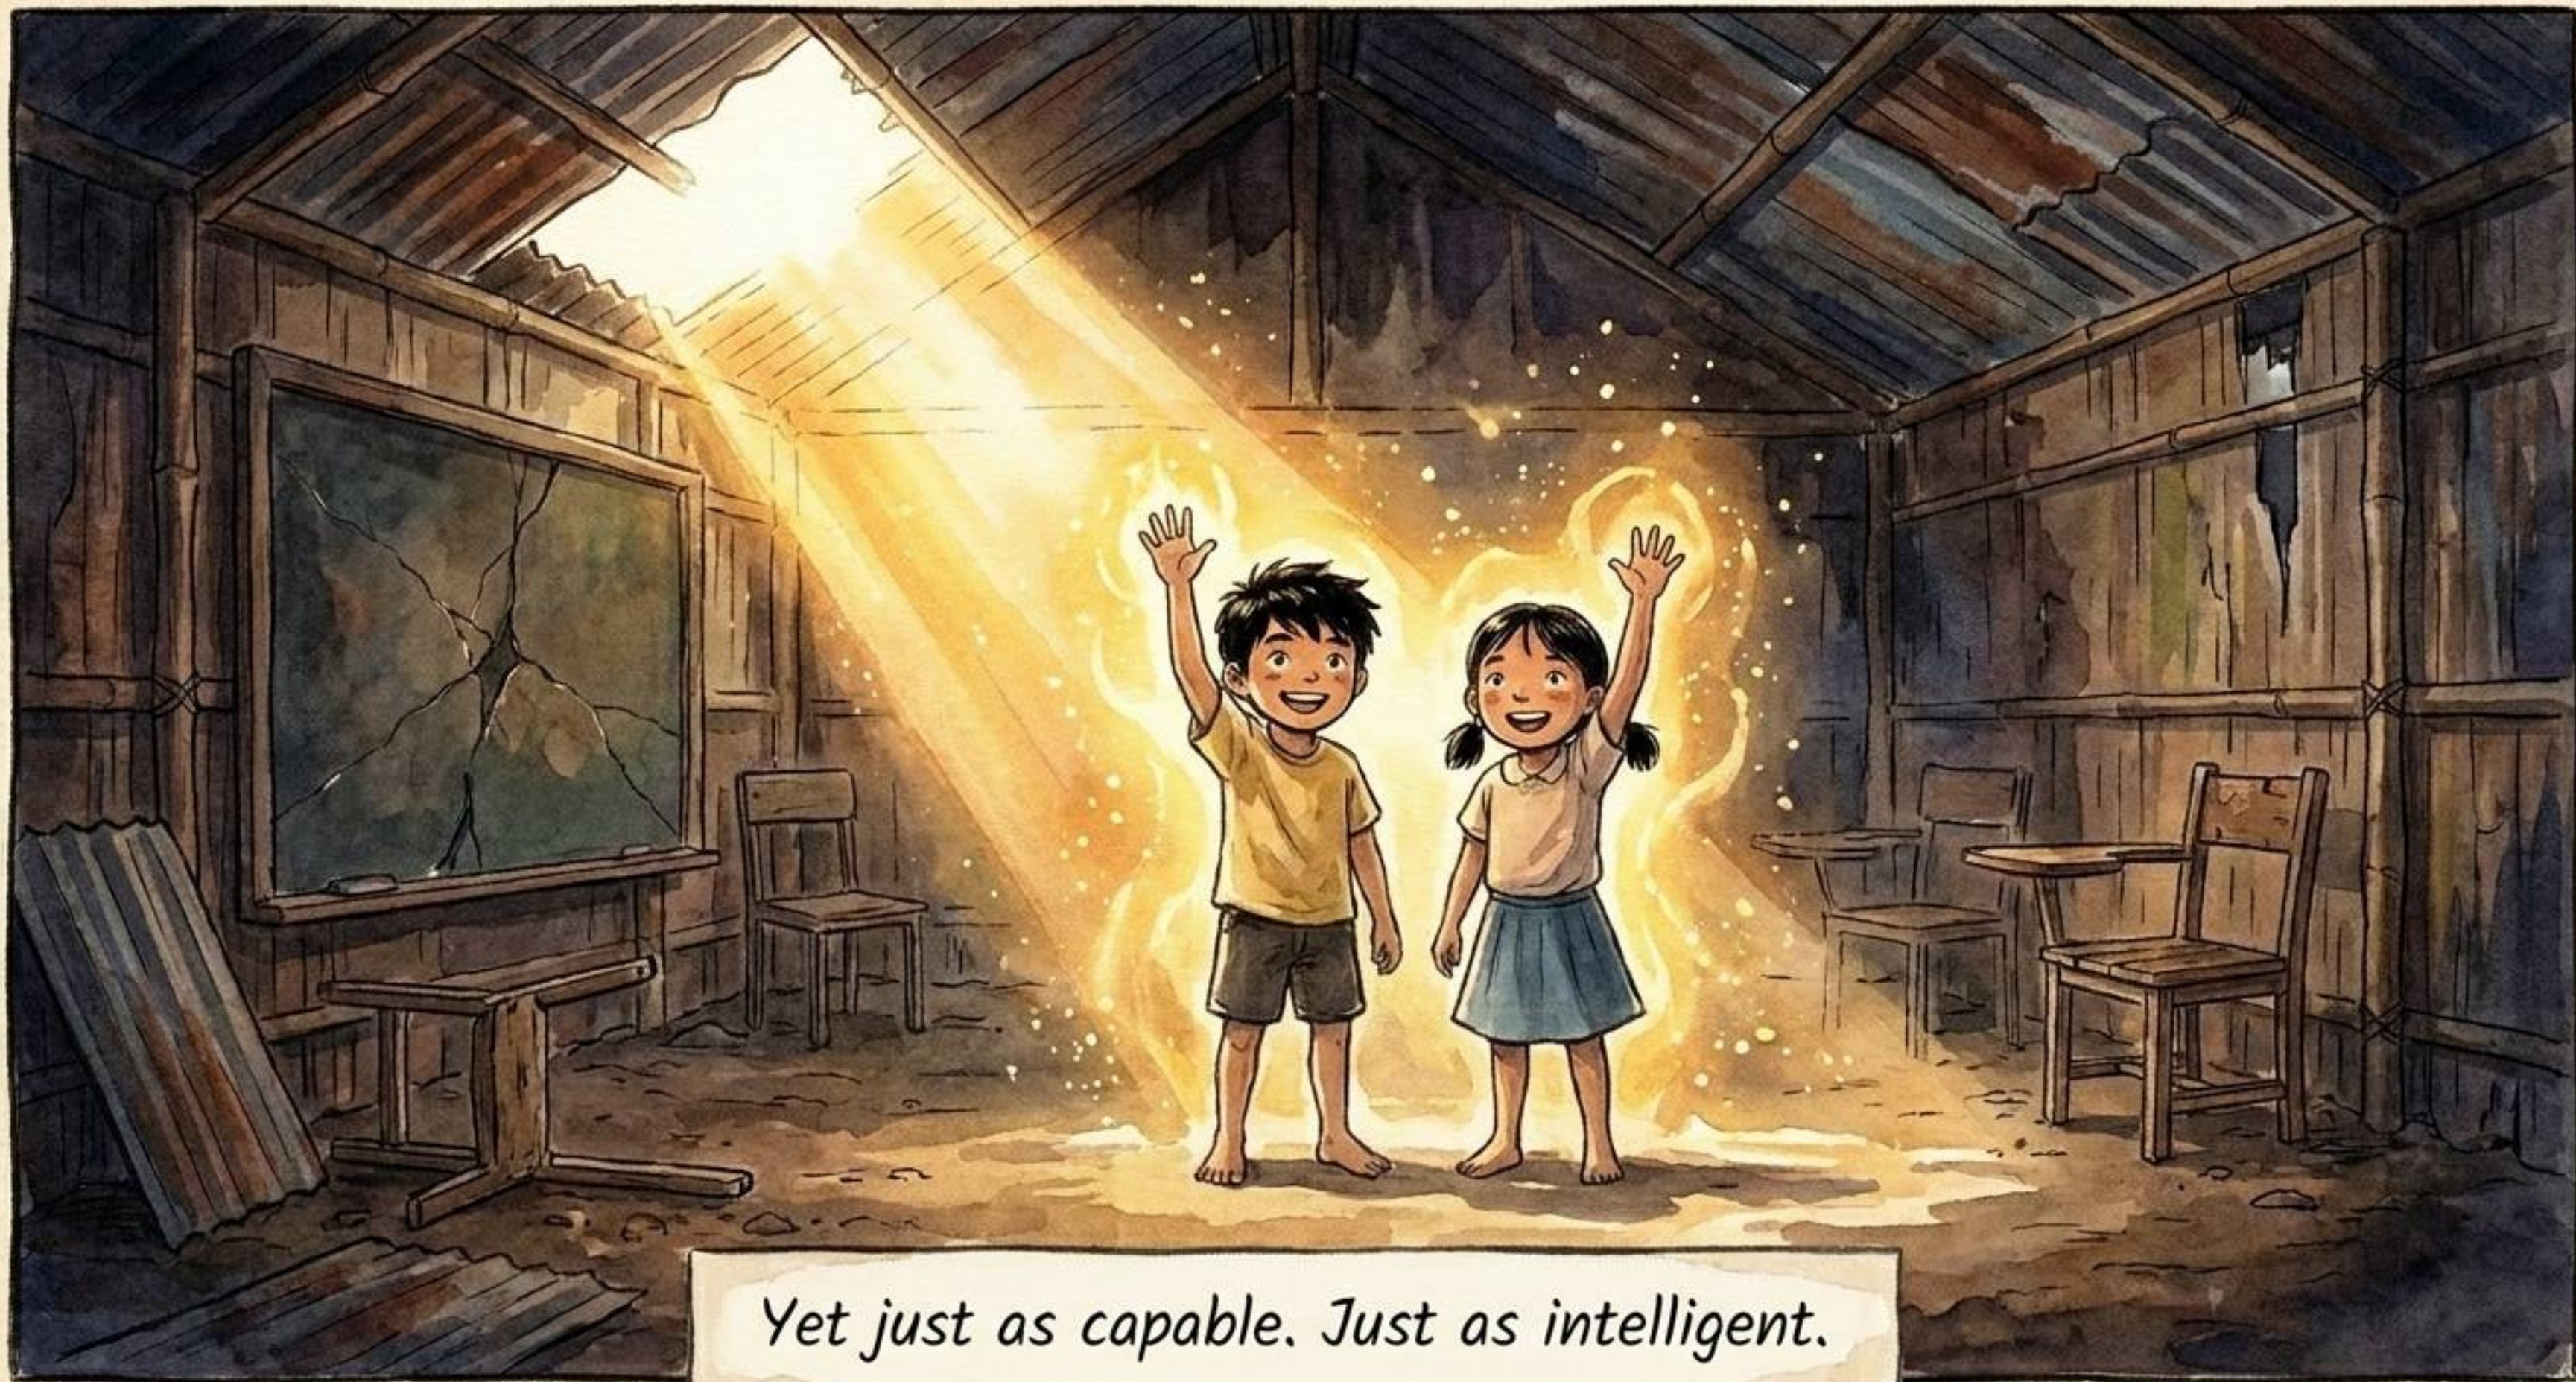

Studying in conditions
I never had to...

...in worn-out chairs, damaged blackboards,
and a makeshift classroom from a shack.

Yet just as capable. Just as intelligent.

A boy with dark hair is shown in profile, looking out of a large window. His hand is resting on his chin in a thoughtful pose. Outside the window, a bright, sunny day is depicted with a large, fluffy thought bubble. Inside the bubble, two children, a boy and a girl, are standing on a grassy lawn. The boy is wearing a yellow shirt and dark shorts, and the girl is wearing a light blue shirt and a dark blue skirt. They are both smiling. In the background of the thought bubble, there are trees and a wooden fence. The scene is bathed in warm, golden light, suggesting a sunset or sunrise. The overall mood is contemplative and nostalgic.

And sometimes I wonder...

What if our opportunities had simply been reversed?

Maybe they would have gone further than I did.

The difference was never talent.

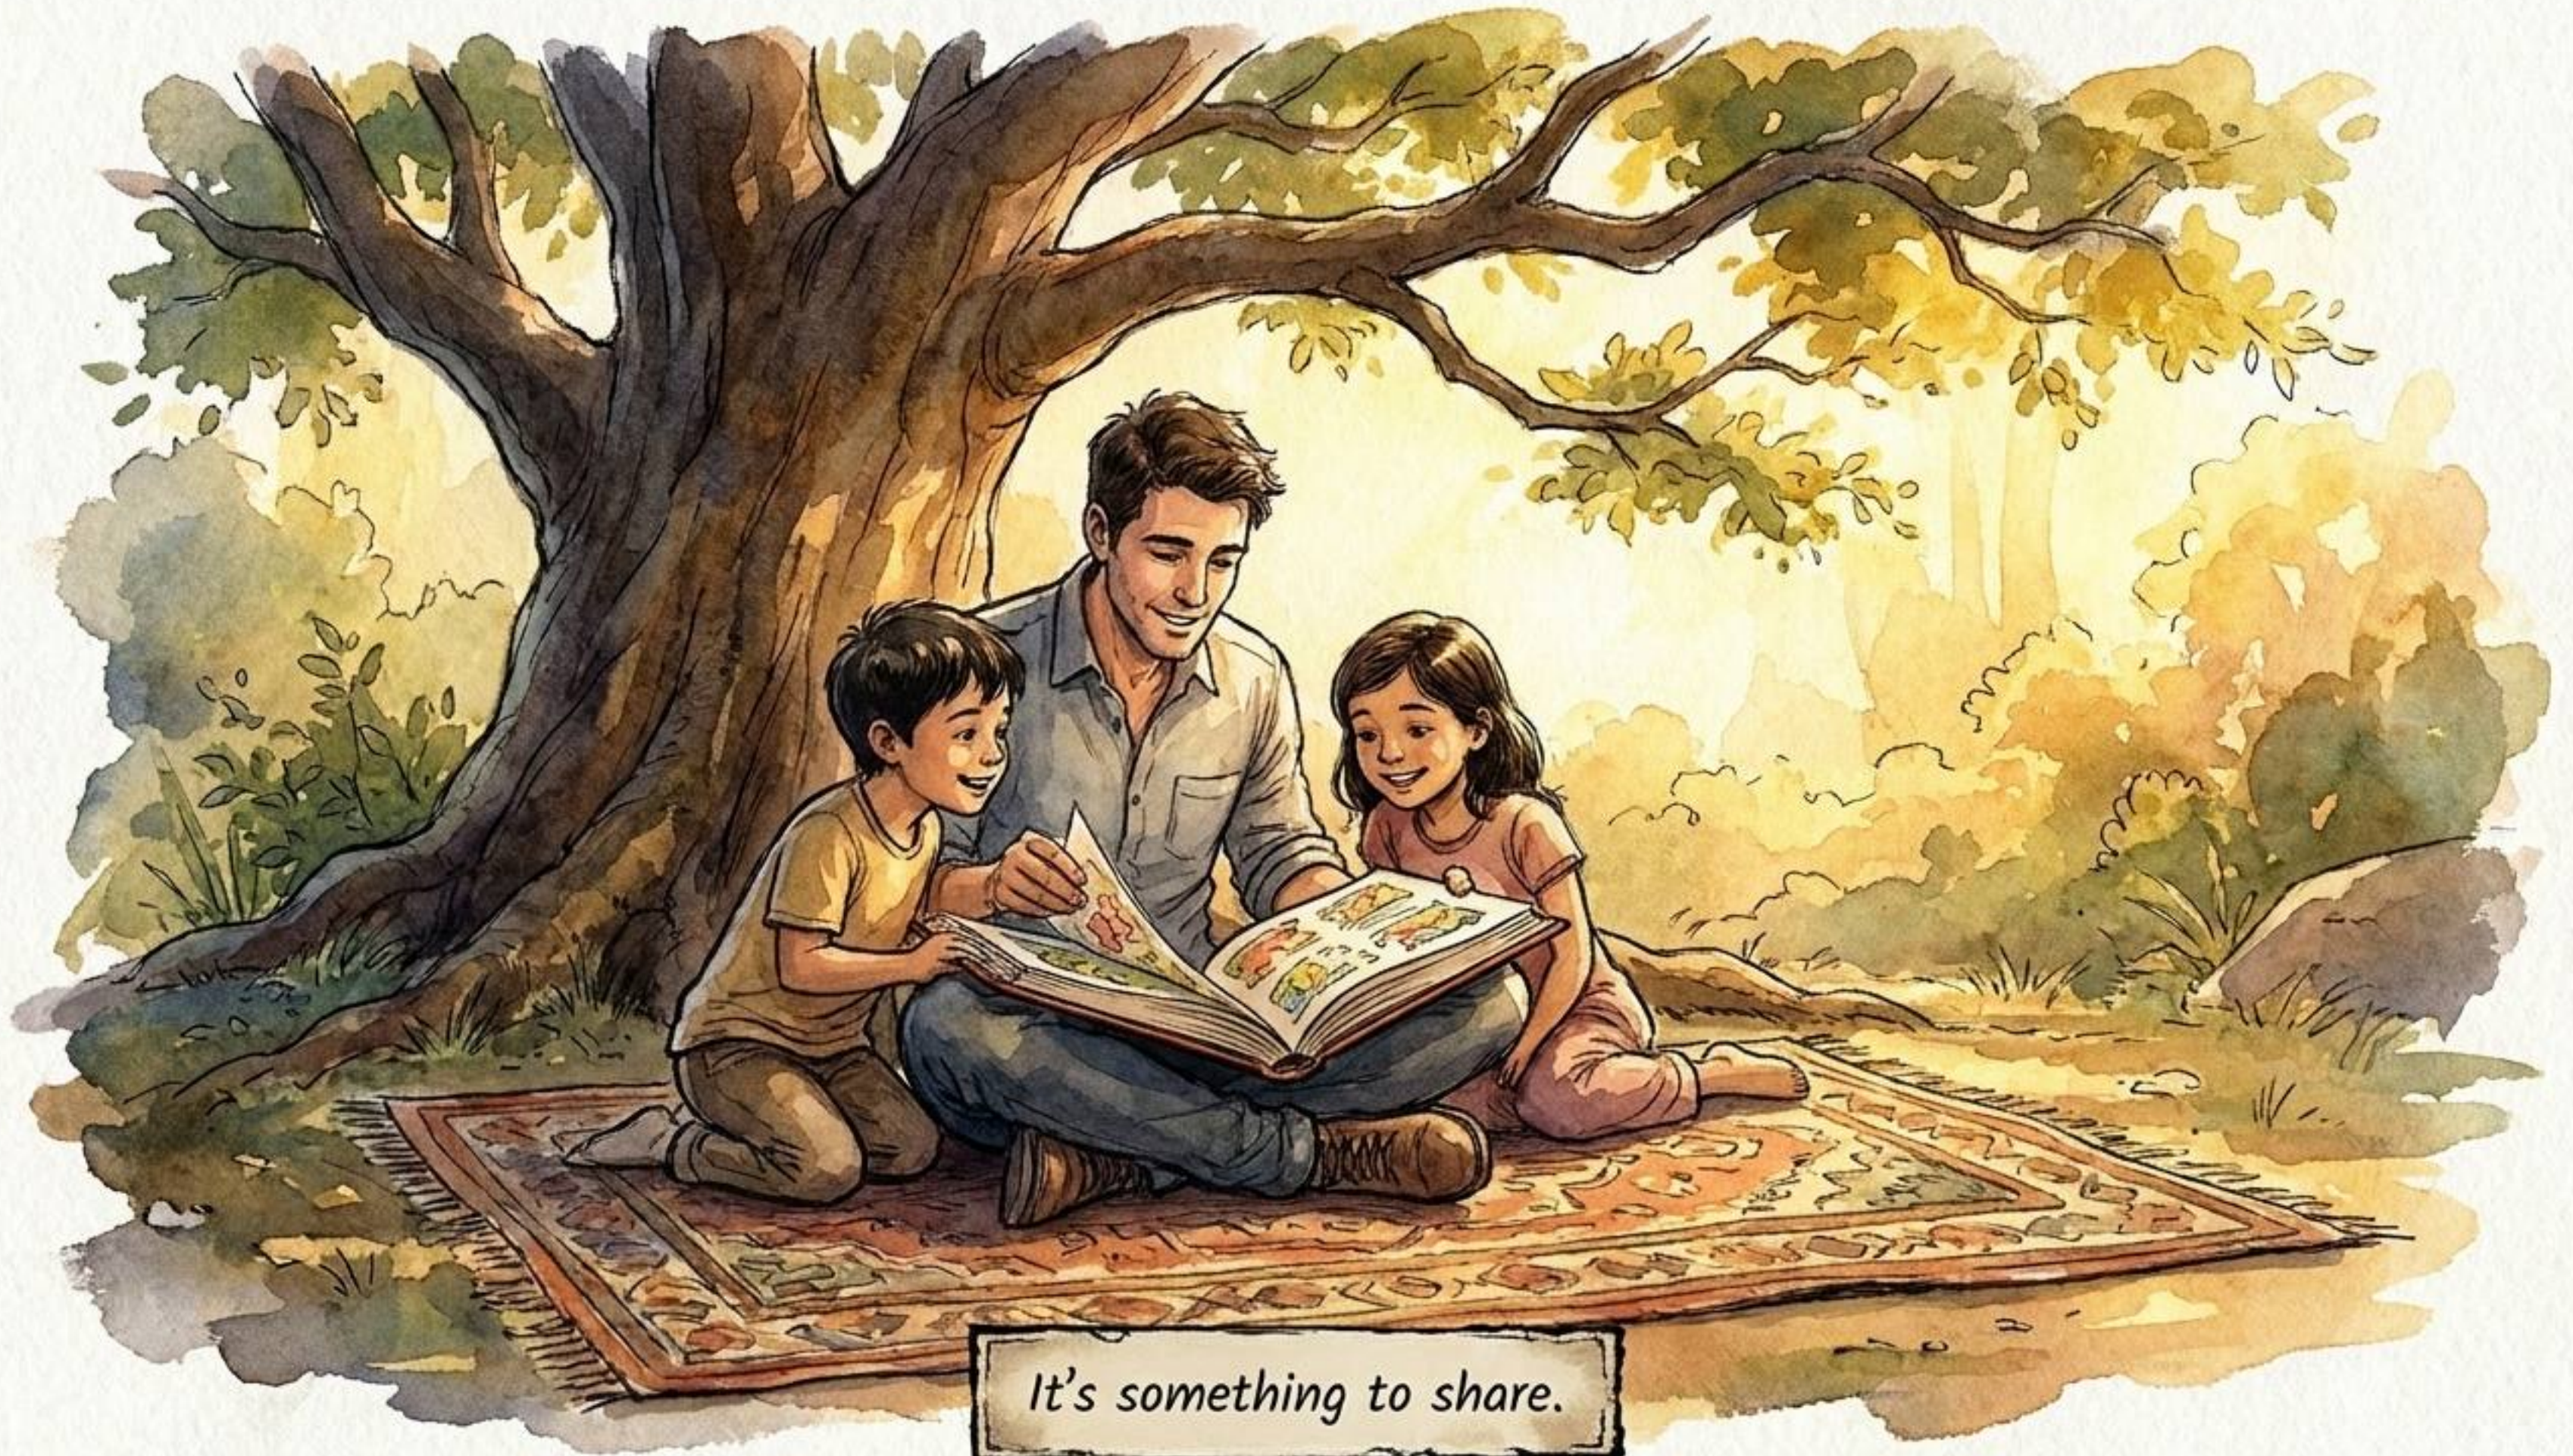

An illustration of two hands shaking in a firm grip. The hand on the left is darker-skinned, and the hand on the right is lighter-skinned. The background is a warm, textured wash of orange and yellow colors, suggesting a sunrise or sunset. The text is overlaid on this background.

Equal Talent + Unequal Opportunity = The Privilege Gap

The missing variable isn't grit. It is ACCESS.

Over time, I've come to realize that my privilege isn't something to apologize for.

It's something to share.

*So that one day, where a child
is born matters a little less.*

*Because our children don't need more grit.
They need a fair shot.*