

The Bigger Heart

*It happens quietly. No alarms go off.
No sirens wail. Just the sudden,
heavy realization... that your first love is over.*

The world outside keeps moving, but inside her bedroom, time completely stops.

Pitter... patter...

*She gets very, very quiet.
Words feel too heavy to speak.*

When the silence inside her head becomes too loud to bear...

How can something that felt so big just disappear?

How can something that felt so big, writes the memory, every memory, every unanswered question, every hurt.

...she pours the silence onto paper. She writes down every memory, every unanswered question, every hurt.

Next, she turns to music. She lets other people's words carry the weight of her feelings for a while.

♪ Soft, melancholic melody playing ♪

Sometimes she cries a lot. Sometimes the tears flow until her eyes burn and her chest feels completely hollow.

And other times... she doesn't cry at all.

Instead, she just feels completely frozen. Like an empty room where the heat has been turned off.

She calls her best friend. And when her friend arrives, she doesn't ask Maya to cheer up or pretend everything is okay.

*She just sits with her in the quiet.
Sharing the weight of the broken pieces.*

Days pass. Slowly, almost invisibly, the freezing cold begins to thaw.

*Healing doesn't happen all at once.
It happens in the tiniest, quietest choices to keep going.*

One afternoon, she steps outside. The air feels crisp and fresh against her face.
She realizes she is finally looking forward, instead of looking back.

She laughs again. A real laugh that starts deep in her belly and fills her up.

And she notices something strange. The ache in her chest isn't a sharp pain anymore. It feels different.

She opens her journal one last time to read the words she wrote in the dark.

10. they all
frantic was strange lonely and. never to that she wrote and went from ~~the~~, it finishy from story my.

The words haven't changed, but she has. They don't hurt her anymore. They are just part of her story now.

She knows now that she will never have to face the darkness alone, because love takes many shapes—like the unconditional kindness of a best friend.

She is ready for whatever comes next. Her heart is whole again.

Because this is the most important secret of all:
A broken heart doesn't break a girl forever. It makes her roomier. It makes her deeper. It makes her heart bigger.

Thank you for watching!

This story is written and created by Jereme. ♥